Contents

Foreword i

Preface ii

Introduction 1

Background and Rationale 5

Rationale of the project 5

Models of Understanding of Health and Illness 7

The social understanding of health 7

Current approaches to gender and health 8

Gender, poverty and health 9

Poverty as an Economic Measure of Income/Consumption 11

From economic poverty to human poverty 12

Gender and human poverty 13

Understanding gender, and gender-based analysis 15

Women and the United Nations 17

Women in Development: the United Nations Decade for Women 18

Gender as a new paradigm in development 20

Gender mainstreaming and the United Nations 21

Guidelines for the analysis of gender and health 24

Gender differences in quality and access to health care 26

What is the difference between gender-based analysis of health and women's health? 27

Mainstreaming gender in health service delivery 28

Guidelines for Good Practices: 29

Implementing the Beijing Platform for Action and Gender Mainstreaming 29

Work categories 29

Criteria for best practice in gender mainstreaming: policy development 30
Criteria for best practice in gender mainstreaming: women's health project development 32

Conclusion 33

Appendix 1: Case Studies of Institutional Gender-mainstreaming Policy 35
Mainstreaming gender awareness in policy within development institutions 35
The World Health Organization (WHO) 35
The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) 39
The Australian Agency for International Development (AusAID) 42
Implementing a gender policy within AusAID 42
The Asian Development Bank (ADB) 44
The Process of developing a gender policy within ADB 44

Appendix 2: Case Studies: Practices to Improve Women's Health (by Region) 47

Appendix 3: Capacity-building for Gender and Reproductive Health 83

Appendix 4: Timeline History of Women and the United Nations 87

Bibliography 89