

THE PEACEFUL
INVASION OF 1900:
The Harvard University Summer
School For Cuban Teachers

*Rosann Santos

A variety of educational paths have been available to women in Latin America for hundreds of years. Normal schools, vocational schools and secondary schools were the most common avenues for women to explore their intellect. In some circumstances, the convent presented an alternative to domesticity, allowing women to become educated and teach others. Twentieth-century education for women dramatically changed as more and more Latin American nations gained independence and sought to University at Albany, Department of History, Albany, New York 12222. Presented at the Third International Women's Studies Workshops: Women on the Threshold of the XXI Century, University of Havana, Cuba, October 1999. Rosann517@aol.com.